What to Look for If you are buying Photoshop for the first time, be sure to find out what your budget is. High-end software can cost $400 or more, with the lower-end software starting at $150. Another helpful guide is from Photoshop's own website: "How to Buy a New Program" (www.adobe.com/photoshop/filetransfer/tips.html). Another useful technique is to look for online vendors that offer bargain Photoshop or other software. These sites do not charge for shipping and other costs, making them a good choice. For example, you can buy Office Depot's Microsoft Office suite for $70, which includes Word, Excel, PowerPoint, Outlook, and Publisher. You also get a DVD of the software, along with access to MSN.com and Windows XP. Another option is software from Creative Recruitment Services Inc. (www.creativerecruitment.com), a service that provides remote access to an array of professional software programs, including Adobe Photoshop. The free version of the program also comes with a tutorial. The best way to choose which software to use is to try them out. We asked visitors of GraphicsBytes.com to tell us their first impressions of Photoshop CS 5.5 to help us track which software they recommend to others. A bigger thumbs-up came from users of Photoshop, than from users of other programs. Though Photoshop was the most popular choice, 729 people chose it. Followed by Painter 8 (332), then Photoshop Elements 3 (327). The audience ranged from novice to professional and new to old users. Winners Adobe Photoshop CS 5.5 The best-loved of the major programs in the Adobe line, and is still the most powerful of the Adobe line, with many of the products merged into a single powerhouse piece of software. For low-end users, a high price of $299 will make this a good investment. It also boasts a very complete set of tutorials that cover every aspect of the software. The program is also clearly targeted toward the novice user. If you are a Photoshop vet, you may be bored, but it is easy to find the tools and buttons that you know and love. Highlights: Super 8, Easy Lightroom, Layer Kit, Liquify Drawing, Painting, and Illustration The best drawing tools are Vector Size and

10.01.2018 14:50 CIO Magazine With the rapid growth of the internet of things, the global market for IoT software is forecast to reach $219 billion in 2018, making it the largest segment of IoT software market. Between 2018 and 2022, we believe, the IoT software market will reach a value of $38.4 billion, registering compound annual growth (CAGR) of over 12.8% during this period. The IoT software market is expected to grow at a CAGR of 12.8% throughout the forecast period. These figures are based on a study titled "IoT Software Market: Global Industry Analysis and Forecast, 2018-2022" conducted by the market research and consulting firm, Market Research Future (MRFR). The research study covers the growth of the IoT software market in the market, and offers insights on the regional and country-level analyses of the IoT software market in emerging and developed regions globally. The global IoT software market is segmented on the basis of the type of IoT software, deployment model, and value chain. On the basis of type of IoT software, the global market for IoT software is segmented into: Cloud-Based Software On-Premise Software Market Dynamics The key driving forces influencing the growth of the global IoT software market are as follows: Expanding Network Coverage and Services Wide Use of Web and Mobile Devices Powerful Computing and Processing Power Integration of IoT in End-to-End Processes Internet of Things Application: The IoT application segment includes the software for data collection, data gathering, data analysis, data fusion, and data visualization. The segments of IoT are offered to meet specific application requirements, including the deployment of IoT devices in different industries and geographical locations. For example, the healthcare sector is the largest segment of IoT software market in the US. The rising number of chronic diseases and the increasing investment in R&D are the primary drivers for this market segment in the US. Developed markets such as the US are also expected to offer a significant growth opportunity for the IoT software market in the coming years. According to the US Census Bureau, the total number of people living in the US is estimated to reach nearly 400 million by the year 2060. It is expected that growth in living standards, expanding use of web and mobile devices, and constantly rising demand for healthcare services will ensure constant growth

Consideration of serum ferritin in the diagnosis of iron overload in pediatric patients with inflammatory bowel disease. Among a population of pediatric patients with inflammatory bowel disease (IBD), high serum ferritin was a common finding. The purpose of this study was to determine whether high ferritin in this patient population was a consequence of greater iron intake or transferrin saturation, or that, more important, it reflected iron overload, since many of these patients suffered from an underlying malabsorption syndrome. Transferrin saturations were well within normal limits for all study patients. Serum ferritin correlated well with the amount of iron received and the percentage of iron absorption as measured by the isotope technique. These data suggest that, at least in this patient population, transferrin saturations fall within normal limits, serum ferritin reflects iron intake and absorption, and that serum ferritin is a valid, inexpensive test for measuring iron overload.
